Nova Scotia Community College was given its largest ever individual donation Wednesday: a $4.6-million endowment fund from the Joyce Foundation.

"This is an absolute gamechanger," said NSCC president Don Bureaux after the announcement. "For us, one of the most important things is to provide opportunities for Nova Scotians to get the skills they need to participate in the economy, and this is going to be a really helpful part of that journey to make sure they're not facing any financial barriers."

The fund will be used to give 140 students bursaries of $1,000 every year — the first 30 of which will be available this fall - and to give 1,000 students urgent-aid bursaries of $500 in the next five years.

Organizers say changes will help broaden event appeal

Halifax Pride Festival will look a little different this year, as the committee is making a few changes to the celebration to include more people in the community.

Halifax Pride Committee chairman Willem Blois unveiled the new Pride logo and theme "It's Your Pride" on Wednesday, saying this year the committee wants to reimagine Pride to incorporate the "uniqueness of the entire pride community."

"However you identify, whatever you choose to celebrate during pride, you will be accepted. You will be welcomed, and you will be celebrated," said Blois.

Along with the new logo and theme, this year's Pride festival will have new events added to the schedule. People can attend the Butch Pageant, screenings of films from the OUTeast Film Festival and the first annual Heritage Gathering. The Heritage Gathering will happen immediately after the popular Dykes vs. Divas softball game, and members of the community can gather on central Gottingen Street, which will be shut down, to celebrate Pride.

"I think that a lot of people are gonna jump on board and I hope to see a lot of people out there," said Blois, adding that the heritage gathering is the event he's most excited about.

As with every year, the favourite events like softball games, dance parties and the huge Pride parade are still on.

Motorcycle and Halifax Poet Laureate El Jones. Local artist Brinleigh Mackinnon will also be performing during the festival.

Along with the line-up, theme and logo, Blois also announced the Grand Marshal of this year's festival, Kate Shewan.

Shewan said she was very honoured and excited to be named the Grand Marshal.

"It puts me in a position where I can highlight some of the challenges that we still have in the community and some of the work that really needs to continue," said Shewan.

"I think the thing I'm really looking forward is the youth experiencing their first Pride," Shewan said.

Halifax Pride Festival runs from July 16 to 26 at locations all across the city.

On Wednesday, Halifax Regional Police said investigators with the Internet Child Exploitation Unit (ICE) searched a home in the 0-100 block of Elmwood Avenue where they arrested a man and seized computer equipment, according to a release.

Zachary Gordon Gardiner, 23, of Dartmouth is set to appear in Dartmouth provincial court on July 28 to face several charges related to child pornography, as well as invitation to sexual touching and luring of a child to facilitate sexual touching.

Early Tuesday morning, police said ICE investigators also searched another residence on Creighton Street where they arrested a suspect and seized computer equipment.

Mayor Savage applauds city's ability to pay off $12M deficit

Stephanie Taylor Metro | Halifax

While Halifax's mayor is patting the municipality on the back for paying off its nearly $12-million deficit, one councillor is questioning the risks involved in reallocating reserve money required to do so.

On Wednesday, the municipality's year-end financial statements were presented to the city's audit and finance standing committee and approved to go before regional council.

City staff outlined how HRM ran an $11.8-million deficit in 2014-15, in part due to the cost of having to clean up the Halifax Transit oil spill, but mostly as a result of the millions spent in excess of last winter's snow budget.

Although Mayor Mike Savage called the deficit unexpected, he lauded the city's ability to get out of the red through dipping into various reserve funds.

"We're financially strong as a municipality, but this has been a difficult year in large part because of the cost of snow and ice," he said outside council chambers Tuesday.

A report says council has already approved transferring around $3 million in reserves, and is now seeking the green light to withdraw the remaining $8.7 million.

However, Coun. Reg Rankin challenged the shifting around of reserve money, telling the We hope we don't have another winter like last year, but who's to say?

committee that it may look good on paper, but carries serious implications.

His concern was specifically around the proposed reallocation of $8 million saved in a waste resources capital fund—the account dedicated to fund future projects at the Otter Lake Landfill.

"That reserve was absolutely not planned to take care of the deficit," Rankin said after Wednesday's meeting. He explained the decision

He explained the decision was "extraordinary" since there was "no assignment of risk" as to what would happen if that pot of money was drained and then actually needed.

"Well, it has to come from a reserve," Savage said of the transfer of funds.

"We're not going to go out to the taxpayer and ask them to cover it. We have money put away for a specific reasons."

In moving forward, Savage says a review of the city's winter operations will be coming to council by the end of summer, and at that time will determine if snow budget increases are in fact necessary.

Sale of former Dartmouth city hall building goes through

A proposal to sell the old Dartmouth City Hall was given the green light by the city's audit and finance standing committee Tuesday.

The committee approved recommendations made in a recent staff report to sell the three-storey office building on 90 Alderney Dr. to Banner Developments Ltd, and now the decision will head to regional council.

The proposed sale of the building comes nearly a year after it was declared a surplus to HRM, according to a staff report.

Before that, council deemed the building—which formerly housed the Dartmouth City Hall and was then used by Halifax Regional School Board for office space—unsuitable for a museum due to it structural assessment.

On Wednesday, Coun. Gloria McCluskey said the proposed sale came as "good Halifax Harbour Bridges is warning drivers that the Macdonald Bridge will be closed for two nights this weekend.

According to a release issued Wednesday, the bridge commission will be closing the bridge to traffic on Friday and Saturday night from 7 p.m. to 5:30 a.m.

The commission says the closures are required to replace two bearings on one of the bridge piers, which is located on the approach span in

The bearings were originally installed on the bridge when it was built in 1995 and are "identified as needing to be replaced based on condition and performance," according to the release.

Typically, the bridge is only closed to traffic overnight from Sunday to Thursday for renovations related to the Big Lift.

However, the commission says this work is unrelated.

Dalhousie University and Tesla Motors have inked an agreement for a new multi-year partnership in the hopes of advancing sustainable energy transportation, according to the school.

In a release issued Wednesday, the university boasts this is the first time a partnership has been struck between the electric car company and a Canadian university.

The school says the new fiveyear partnership will see the company collaborate with professor Dr. Jeff Dahn, who is touted as a lithium-ion (Li-ion) "battery pioneer," starting June 2016.

"Our research group's goal is to increase the energy density and lifetime of Li-ion batteries, so we can drive down costs in automotive and grid energy storage applications," Dahn said in the release.

It also states that the partnership aligns with the company's mandate to expand electric vehicles beyond a niche market by lowering their cost through developing Li-ion batteries with longer lifespan, which cost less to create.

BACKSTAGE PASS

Shore Club stands strong, still hopping after 69 years

Aly Thomson For Metro | Halifax

It's a sticky summer night, and hundreds of people are sharing a dance below fishing nets loosely draped from thick wooden beams under a pitched ceiling.

Sweaty feet slide across the maple hardwood floors as the sound of Matt Minglewood's guitar roars through the dance hall.

That happened at the Shore Club almost half a century ago. But it also happened last summer and many summers in between.

After 69 years, the familyowned Shore Club continues to be a summer destination for lobster suppers and live music.

"Generations of people have come here to claim it as their own," said Rhys Harnish, who took the helm of the club in the early 1980s after his father Roy retired.

Amazingly, not much has changed at the Hubbards landmark since it was opened by Roy and Lois Harnish on Aug. 24, 1946. But no one seems to mind.

Matt Mays' first two shows at the club this summer sold out in less than three days, prompting a third show to be added, which is now nearly sold out. It's one of many bands this season — including the Mellotones, Hey Rosettal, Rasta Gumbo and Asia and NuGruv — that will no doubt pack the house.

Harnish said that, in the beginning, the Shore Club was one of only a few places in the province staging rock shows.

"It's really how the early genesis of rock music started in Nova Scotia," said Harnish, next to the club's kitchen where tens of thousands of lobsters are cooked every season.

Constructed by five ship builders in just three months using salvaged material from a Second World War base in Debert, the wood floors and walls, nautical decor and even the glass windows are still holding up after all these years.

Nowadays, it's not unusual to see millennials clinking beers with baby boomers at the bar

"It's sort of one of the few entertainment venues where people of all ages mix together and enjoy a show," said the 64-year-old Harnish.

Harnish's son Luke, who may eventually take over the Shore Club, said it's the welcoming atmosphere that draws a diverse crowd.

"It's a different expectation when you enter the Shore Club. It's not about impressing people. It's about relaxing and having a good time," he said.

TRADITION

The Shore Club's patrons aren't the only ones who appreciate its rich history and authentic Nova Scotian vibe.

Local musician Hal Bruce, who has rocked the red stage in Hubbards every year for nearly a decade, called it one of his favourite places to play.

"From the first song right until the last song, people are dancing the whole night away," said Bruce, a classic-rock connoisseur known to play for hours without breaks.

"It's not like a pub where you sit down and you chat all night long. These people are there on a mission. They want to dance and listen to some tunes."

The Stanfields lead singer and guitarist Jon Landry said the Shore Club has a retro feel that fosters live music.

"I can almost imagine my dad and his buddies jumping in a (Ford) Pinto and headed out there to listen to Matt Minglewood," said Landry, whose band is co-headlining a show July 10.

"It harkens back to when live music was a lot more prominent, so it's cool to be a little tiny part of carrying on that tradition."

Every summer Saturday since 1946, we've always had a live band on stage.

Promoter 'ruined' by backlash over Octonauts show

The promoter of a live children's show featuring Octonaut characters says he is devastated by the backlash over a weekend performance.

Following last Saturday's show, a number of people lambasted the show on social media regarding the duration and number of characters involved in the Sydney matinee.

"It's just mind-boggling that this is happening. Right now my company is ruined because they are all over the place bashing it," said Marco Amati, president and director of Chilo Promotions. "I was at the show and I didn't see anything but kids having a great time," said Amati, who insisted there was no misrepresentation in what was promoted and what was presented.

"It is a 25-minute performance, and that is because it is geared toward children between two to five years of age who have limited attention spans."

Amati explained that the show featured popular Octonauts Captain Barnacles and Kwazii, two of the eight characters from the popular British animated series. He added that the performance included veteran children's entertainer Duncan Wells, face painting and balloon animals, along with a meet-and-greet.

Among those expressing dissatisfaction was Blair Redquest, who journeyed from the Truro area along with her husband and their daughter, Hayden.

"We were disappointed because we thought it was too short, and Hayden had the big lip going because Peso, her favourite Octonaut, wasn't there," she said.

A bagpiper piped everyone in through the fancy front doors. Inside, my name was announced before I shook the hands of Lt.-Gov. J.J. Grant and his wife, Joan.

Then I entered the large garden full of nice flowers, with people eating small, crustless sandwiches and drinking tea.

The crowd was mostly seniors, but I guess that's expected at an event like this. However, there were a surprising number

"It was such a strange thing to see online — an ad for a garden party at the lieutenant-governor's house, so I was really curious," said Asher Goldstein, who was relaxing in the garden with his friend, Ana Correa.

"I am surprised at how many people who are here who are under 50," said Correa.

Speaking of crazy headwear, there were many hats that beat out my homemade fascinator.

Tanya D'entremont and her grandmother, Irene, bought their fascinators especially for the day's garden party.

"It's nice to come out and see everybody all dressed up and mingling. It's a different aspect of life," said Tanya.

"You can meet old friends and new ones, and it's a lovely day and we're very happy to have been invited," said Irene.

To my surprise, one of the tea drinkers dressed in pearls and feathers was seven-year-old Bianca Corsetti. She got out of school for the afternoon to go to the party with her grandparents.

She said her favourite part was the outfits.

Accused triple murderer due back in court next month

A man charged in the deaths of three people in a house fire in the Halifax area had his case rescheduled on Wednesday to give the Crown time to work out the details for a second psychiatric assessment of the accused.

Codey Reginald Hennigar was charged with three counts of second-degree murder after the remains of three people were found in a home in January.

The Crown says the court date in July will determine how much time is needed to do the second assessment.

74-year-old Ida Raye Ward and 54-year-old Mildred Ann Ward were found in a rural home about 25 kilometres northeast of Halifax's airport in January.

Police haven't discussed the relationships between the deceased and the accused, citing the federal Privacy Act.

Money stolen from donation box at N.S. SPCA

Staff was feeling pretty happy about a successful open house at a Nova Scotia SPCA last weekend until an upsetting incident occurred on Tuesday morning.

A person or persons broke into the Yarmouth facility and stole money from the donation box and hundreds of dollars from a cash box.

The security company for the shelter called supervisor Sarah Burke around 4 a.m. after the alarm was triggered. "I shut off the alarm and I noticed that the change from the donation box was all over the floor and the paperwork from the desk was all over the place," she said.

Burke says the stolen funds will be missed considerably. "It would have helped with a lot of medical payments.... spaying, neutering." Luckily all the animals are okay. Obviously they weren't the mission, she added.

Currently there are six dogs and 14 cats awaiting adoption at the facility. YARMOUTH VANGUARD

AG report targets industries

Province must improve safety. aid programs, says Pickup

Nova Scotia's auditor general says the province can't ad-equately monitor fish farms and is calling on the govern-ment to improve its ability to identify outbreaks of disease in the industry.

Michael Pickup says in a report released Wednesday that the Department of Fisheries and Aquaculture follows its policies in issuing licences, leases and renewals.

But he says the department relies on the federal government or companies to volunteer information about disease outbreaks.

The findings are in the auditor general's latest report to the legislature, which says the Department of Health and Wellness also doesn't know if prevention and treatment programs for problem gamblers work. "Many Nova Scotians who need help with problems re-lated to their gambling do not reach out to provincial services," Pickup said in a statement. "Health and Wellness needs to figure out why this is and focus on getting more of those people

Public gets say on plane noise

Residents under flight paths to be consulted

The federal government wants to give people living under flight paths the chance to have their voices heard over the din of passing air-

Residents in affected communities will now be included in consultations and deliberations about shifting flight paths at major airports.

The new rules went into effect on Wednesday.
Transport Minister Lisa

Raitt said she expects every airport in the country to follow the spirit and intent of the new rules when they make decisions about the routes planes fly, whether it's a change to flight paths to Toronto Pearson International.

or to the smaller Billy Bishop Airport on Toronto Island. "We expect that you're go-ing to implement this proto-col so we can avoid the disaster that has happened with the implementation of new flight routes in the Toronto Pearson area," Raitt told re-porters in Ottawa.

She said many residents who live under those flight paths have been frustrated that their voices weren't heard when changes were made in the past.

Previously, airports only had to ask for input from anyone living within 10 nautical miles — about 18 kilometres of an airport. If anyone farther away had issues, there was little they could do, which has frustrat-ed many residents affected by airport noise.

The federal government could only shift a flight path if there was a safety problem,

We expect ... to implement this protocol so we can avoid the disaster that has happened with ... new flight routes in the Toronto Pearson area.

Transport Minister Lisa Raitt and Nav Canada, the private body charged with navigating all flights in Canadian airspace, didn't have to consult the public on changes, she said. When Raitt was asked what would happen if airports didn't follow the new rules, she said residents should call her directly, "and we'll have a conversation with the airports.'

AIRPORT SECURITY

Turban rules lifted

Transport Minister Lisa Raitt says there's no need to reimpose a rule that required passengers to remove religious headgear when going through airport security. Raitt says the agency charged with screening travellers at air-ports has other tools at its disposal to ensure safety without requiring passengers such as Sikhs to remove their turbans.

Raitt says department officials are reviewing the policy to see if there is a way to enact the rule anew in a non-discriminatory way. On Tuesday, Raitt struck down her department's April decision to implement the rule but only for flights within Canada.

The decision came hours after the World Sikh Organization of Canada condemned the policy as discriminatory because it required Sikhs to remove their turbans, which their religion requires them to wear.

Raitt says she learned of the policy about two weeks ago after caucus colleagues raised concerns they had heard from Sikh travellers. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Grizzly attack barely avoidable, officer says

A woman who surprised a grizzly bear in the mountains near Horsefly, B.C., likely could not have pre-vented the attack, a conservation officer says. Len Butler says the incident Friday was a chance encounter between the woman in her mid-20s and a young bear that probably lunged in self-defence.

Butler says the woman and a companion, both from nearby Williams Lake, were hiking mid-afternoon when they emerged on a

He says the bear came up the hill at about the same moment and then took the path of least resistance, biting and breaking the woman's arm before running off into the

The contents of our hearts and everything else that was laid bare during our summit experience were a reflection of the exuberance and joy we felt for our achievement of climbing the tallest peak in Southeast Asia," the statement says. "There was absolutely no ill intent."

They were among 10 for-

Dutch citizen Dylan Snel and British student Eleanor Hawkins, spent three days in jail before pleading guilty to public indecency. They were fined about $1,600 each and deported.

The Petersens arrived back in Saskatchewan over the week end. A person who answered the phone at their parents' home in Wood Mountain, southwest of Regina, declined comment.

Group warns about kitchen cleansers

Half an hour of kitchen cleanup using common household cleansers, wipes and sprays dramatically boosts harmful indoor air pollution, according to a study by an environmental advocacy group.

Canada has no standards for indoor concentrations of VOCs, nor has the government issued regulations to ensure all ingredients are included on cleaning product labels.

Environmental Defence, a leading advocate in the successful push to ban bisphenol A in baby bottles and phthalates in toys, used a German standard for VOC concentrations in the air as the benchmark in its latest study.

Fourteen Ontario households had their air tested the day before the kitchen cleaning and then again for a two-hour period during and after the cleaning. Some homeowners were given popular wipes, cleansers and glass sprays to use, some used products with non-verifiable "green" claims and two used certified green products. The results showed an aver-

SAT CONSPIRACY CASE

Eight plead not guilty in test scam

Eight of 15 Chinese citizens indicted in a conspiracy to take college entrance exams on behalf of others or pay to have their tests taken so they could obtain student visas pleaded not guilty before a federal magistrate Wednesday.

Federal prosecutors allege they scammed tests run by Educational Testing Service and the College Board — such as the Scholastic Aptitude Test, or SAT — for more than $5,000 per exam.

The alleged scheme involves tests administered in Pittsburgh and its suburbs since 2011. Some of the defendants eventually enrolled in out-of-state schools, though investigators and defence attorneys have refused to supply specifics.

Two students arraigned Wednesday were enrolled at Virginia Tech and a third is accused of having someone else take a test whose results were sent to Northeastern University.

"Mistakes were clearly made and they're probably going to end up paying for them," said defence attorney Lyle Dresbold, who represents Yue Zou, 20.

Zou and her boyfriend and co-defendant, Yudong Zhang, 21, were listed as students Wednesday on Virginia Tech's website. Zou is studying finance and Zhang general engineering at the school, where officials didn't immediately comment on their status or the test-related charges.

Zhang allegedly sent a photocopy of Zou's passport to Han Tong, 24, who's identified as a test-taker, before another woman arraigned Wednesday, Yunlin Sun, 24, took SAT and English language tests while posing as Zou, according to the indictment.

U.S. Attorney David Hickton said the investigation is just part of an ongoing investigation spurred, in part, by concerns that people from China and other Asian countries have been impersonating others, or otherwise cheating on the tests.

Attorneys for Tong, considered a central figure in the charges filed so far, and several other defendants declined comment. Robert Mielnicki, the attorney for Sun, said she "contests the allegations" but declined to elaborate. The only other attorney who spoke was Gary Gerson, who represents Gong Zhang, 23. He allegedly took an English fluency exam in 2013 for another person not named. The associated presss

U.S. teen's arm bitten off by shark

NORTH CAROLINA

Victim felt something bump his leg before the bite

Hunter Treschl and his cousin were "playing around in the waves" at a North Carolina beach when he felt something bump into his left calf.

"I thought it felt like a big fish, and I started moving away," Treschl said in a video released Tuesday night by the New Hanover Regional Medical Center.

"And then the shark bit my arm — off."

The 16-year-old from Colorado Springs, Colorado, was one of two young people attacked by sharks in North Carolina on Sunday. Both he and 12-year-old Kiersten Yow of Asheboro survived, but with serious injuries.

Treschl's left arm was amputated below the shoulder, according to information released by the New Hanover Regional Medical Center in Wilmington, North Carolina, where he is being treated.

He was in good condition Tuesday, hospital spokeswoman Martha Harlan said.

A little more than an hour before Treschl was attacked and about two miles away, Yow lost her left arm below the elbow and was injured in the leg.

Authorities do not know if they were attacked by the same shark.

Yow was in stable condition Tuesday at N.C. Children's Hospital at the University of North Carolina, according to a statement from her parents, Brian and Laurie Yow.

"She has a long road to recovery that will include surgeries and rehabilitation, but her doctors at UNC expect she will keep her leg, and for that we are grateful," they said, appealing for time to deal with the trauma privately.

Immediately after he felt the shark rip his arm off, Treschl said he was able to make it back onto the beach at Oak Island with the help of his cousin.

He said another teen had a belt that he used as a tourniquet to stop the bleeding, while others "were all helping me kind of stay calm until the ambulance got there."

Asked if he ever saw the shark, Treschl said he felt it first.

"We were just playing around in the waves, and I felt a hit on my left calf," he said in the video.

"That was the first time I saw it, when it was biting up my left arm."

The paramedics said they were stunned by two calls coming so close together in just one day.

Shark population up around U.S.

Federal wildlife protections are helping sharks rebound, but they aren't the sole reason for the uptick in encounters between sharks and humans. Expanding human populations and growing use of beaches are major factors too, scientists say.

Recent shark attacks in North Carolina and Florida have made headlines as the summer beach-going season gets into gear. Such attacks have become more common in recent years - the Florida Museum of Natural History's International Shark Attack File says the number of unprovoked shark attacks has grown in every decade since the 1970s.

Shark researcher George Burgess, who publishes the file, said this decade is almost certain to set a record for shark attacks.

"The fact of the matter is, while shark populations rebound and hopefully come to where they once were, the human population is rising every year," Burgess said. "We're not rebounding, we're just bounding." Americans made 2.2 billion visits to beaches in 2010, up from 2 billion in 2001, according to a U.S. Army Corps of Engineers estimate. A spokesman for the American Shore and Beach Preservation Association said the figure is likely still rising because of the improving economy.

Populations of some shark species have grown due in part to conservation efforts, such as a U.S. law that prevented the hunting of great white sharks.

Man dead after predator escapes zoo during floods

A tiger that broke loose after severe flooding at the Tbilisi Zoo mauled a man to death in the Georgian capital before being shot by police Wednesday, a day after officials said all the zoo's tigers had died.

Zoo director Zurab Gurielidze acknowledged he was to blame for releasing faulty information. He said new counts indicated a tiger cub and a hyena could still be on the loose. The city has remained on edge, with runaway predators reportedly seen by some residents.

The Interior Ministry in the former Soviet republic said the tiger was hiding in an abandoned factory that had been turned into a construction market when he attacked the man. The victim, who worked in the market, later died of his wounds at a hospital.

'We entered the depot and, suddenly, a white tiger rushed out of an adjacent room and attacked one of the workers, jumping at his throat and mauling him," colleague Alexander Shavbulashvili told The Associated Press.

We broke the window of another room to flee, and the sound of breaking glass must have scared it and it ran away."

Police commandos rushed to the site and killed the tiger.

"It was a white tiger," Interior Minister Vakhtang Gomelauri told the Associated Press. "We wanted to sedate it, but it was very aggressive and we had to liquidate it."

Zoo spokeswoman Khatia Basilashvili couldn't immediately offer any details about the dead tiger. The zoo administration had said Tuesday that eight lions, all its seven tigers and at least two of its three jaguars and 12 of its 14 bears were killed in the flooding.

Georgia's Prime Minister Irakli Garibashvili criticized zoo officials for providing false information and ordered the interior minister to personally oversee the count of how many animals have died and how many remain missing.

After the premier's statement, the zoo director acknowledged he was to blame for the misinformation.

"We had wrong information that there were no predators outside the zoo," he said. "I take full responsibility for that.

Gurielidze said a tiger cub could also be roaming the city streets, but said he "poses no threat to people."

On Tuesday evening, several hundred demonstrators gathered outside the main government building in Tbilisi in support of the zoo director and to protest what they suspect is a government attempt to pin all the blame on him. A social media post organizing the protest said the government should resign.

The flooding, triggered by torrential rains over the weekend, killed at least 19 people, destroyed houses and tore up roads. Six people remain missing.

Zoo officials say less than half of the zoo's 600 inhabitants have survived the flooding.

165 pardoned ahead of holiday

Egypt's president issued a decree pardoning 165 people on Wednesday, mostly youths convicted of breaking protest laws and misdemeanours ahead of the holy month of Ramadan.

Many of the pardons issued by President Abdel-Fattah el-Sissi were to university students, some jailed under a draconian law that heavily punishes demonstrations staged without police permits.

The move comes amid a stateorchestrated campaign to silence dissent, where courts dispense stiff sentences against both Islamists and secular-minded activists over charges mostly related to violence. Pardons during national and religious holidays are a tradition in Egypt.

Rights groups say many of the people were sentenced over the past two years to around three to four years of imprisonment, and that some were arrested at home or on the sidelines of protests in which they were not participating.

"It's not just the new protest law at work here, there's also a poor judiciary and lack of a credible investigative process, and some are being charged under another 100-year-old law limiting even small assemblies," said Mohammed Zaree of the Cairo Institute for Human Rights Studies.

The protest measure became law after the el-Sissi-led military's ouster of Islamist President Mohammed Morsi in July 2013, part of a sweeping crackdown against his supporters and other dissidents.

The clampdown, which left hundreds dead and thousands in prison, some without charges, has sparked a radical backlash and attacks against security forces. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Deaths blamed on rotted beams

The balcony collapse that killed six college students appears to have been caused by rotted wooden beams, Berkeley's mayor said Wednesday as the victims' heartbroken loved ones began arriving in the U.S. from Ireland.

Bates said it was "obviously a bad idea" for 13 people to crowd onto such a small balcony but added that he is not blaming the victims.

Cassandra Bujarski, a spokeswoman for the apartments' property management firm, Greystar, had no comment.

Building inspectors also determined another balcony at the Library Gardens apartment complex was "structurally unsafe and presented a collapse hazard," and it ordered it demolished. Two other balconies were redtagged, or declared off-limits, at the apartments, which were completed in 2007.

IATA scraps carry-on luggage plan

TRAVEL

Global airline group hoped to impose new size restrictions

A global airline association said Wednesday that it was scrapping its recommendation to reduce the size of carry-on bags for air travellers after an "intense" response in North America.

The International Air Transportation Association (IATA), a Montreal-headquartered trade group whose members represent nearly 85 per cent of total air traffic, said it is cancelling its proposal after "significant concerns" were raised in North America.

"This is clearly an issue that is close to the heart of travellers. We need to get it right," IATA senior vice president Tom Windmuller said.

The group recommended last week that airlines require carryon bags to be 20 per cent smaller than what major U.S. carriers currently permit, saying that would allow for more space.

A top U.S. airline group that includes the world's three largest air carriers — American, Delta and United — also formally came out against the proposal.

The current maximum carryon size, depending on the airline, ranges from a length of 56 to 60 centimetres, a width of about 36 to 46 centimetres and a depth of 23 to 41 centimetres...

IÂTA insisted that was merely a recommendation, not a requirement, as each airline decides the maximum size of carryon luggage on its own.

CHANTAL HÉBERT: ON ELECTORAL REFORM

For the first time, two of Canada's three main parties are about to run on a commitment to do away with the first-past-the-post voting system.

The Liberal conversion to electoral reform is both a reflection of the party's diminished circumstances in the House of Commons and — potentially — a watershed moment in Canadian electoral politics.

For the first time, two of Canada's three main national parties — the NDP and the Liberals — are about to run on a commitment to do away with the first-past-the-post voting system to conduct federal elections.

They may not agree on the fine print. The New Democrats have long championed a mixed proportional system and the Liberals tend to be partial to a preferential ballot. But they are on the same general page.

On Tuesday, Justin Trudeau pledged to introduce a new voting system in time for the 2019 election.

The New Democrats have advocated a more proportional voting regimen for decades.

With the Green party on side, the blocks of a large parliamentary consensus on electoral reform are falling into place.

It took a change of heart on the Liberals' part to bring that about.

Such a change would have been unthinkable back when the party, under Jean Chrétien, was riding high and reaping the benefits of the first-past-the-post system against a divided right.

Even after they lost power to Stephen Harper's Conservatives a decade ago, the Liberals continued to believe that the normal swing of the pendulum would inevitably see them back in power.

Three lost elections later, they are at least as likely to remain in third place as to form a government this fall.

Implicit in the party's shift on electoral reform is a Liberal admission that the NDP's competitive position is not a mere blip but rather a feature that it will have to adapt to.

In a three-way battle, the current winner-take-all-system favours the Conservatives.

That conclusion is only belatedly dawning on Trudeau's party.

It has been more than three decades since the Liberals last won a governing majority against a united Conservative party.

Even with the wind in their backs, the New Democrats would also be hardpressed to eke out a majority in October.

Win or lose next fall, electoral reform may offer both parties the best alternative to a merger at some point down the line, and — more importantly in the big picture for each of them — their best shot at preventing the Conservatives from becoming Canada's de facto governing party.

Trudeau's democratic reform package may not do much to turn the tide in his favour. Paul Martin and Michael Ignatieff tried and failed to impress voters with measures to fix the so-called democratic deficit in Parliament.

The excitement that electoral reform inspires among voters tends to be inversely proportional to the hype that surrounds the issue within the chattering class.

In the provinces where a plan for a different system was put to voters, the status quo prevailed.

But the expanding common ground between the opposition parties on electoral reform should be cause for concern for the Conservatives.

They would — at least initially — be the losers of a switch to a different electoral system. The division in the opposition vote has long been a key ingredient of their election victories.

In a three-way battle, the current winner-takes-all system favours the Conservatives.

It allowed Brian Mulroney to win a second majority mandate and the 1988 free trade battle.

Under Stephen Harper, a divided opposition vote has become even more essential to Conservative fortunes.

He is about to lead the party in his fourth election campaign as the incumbent with a persistent shortfall in support and precious little room to grow.

In a preferential voting system — where the second and third choices of voters are applied in each riding until a candidate reaches 50 per cent plus one — Harper's re-election bid would be dead on arrival.

Alternatively, under a mixed proportional system, securing a majority government on a bit more than a third of the votes cast would become a thing of the past.

Coalition building would not come easily to the take-no-prisoner party that Harper has rebuilt in his image.

Should the NDP or the Liberals or a combination of both prevail next fall, they would have a common interest in following up on electoral reform.

The world's believers have a moral duty to care for the earth

Pope Francis is donning a Captain Planet image — the environmental superhero taking pollution down (if not to zero).

In his most highly anticipated papal teaching to date, the Pope will today call on the world — not just Catholics like me — to act now to avoid "unprecedented destruction of the ecosystem," based in part on a moral obligation to care for God's creation.

It's a claim that won't make him any friends among the faithful who either don't believe in climate change, or don't buy into such a moral obligation. And for those in the environmental movement, it may seem criminally late in coming.

But Francis is far from the first — and far from alone — in arguing the environmental implications of faith.

The Dalai Lama tweeted this week that we need to "develop a sense of the oneness of humanity" in the face of climate change and global economic woes. More than 300 rabbis have signed a letter arguing for "a world of shared, sustainable abundance—eco-social justice."

"The concept of stewardship on Earth is a shared belief" of all faiths, an imam with the Islamic Society of North America recently told Time magazine.

At the Forum on Religion and Ecology at Yale, co-founder John Grim and others have spent two decades retrieving the ecological teaching of the world's religions — from Hinduism to indigenous faiths — and interpreting them for today.

Grim sees this as a pivotal moment — the first time a pope has been this pointed on the environment. It could even spur an interfaith environmental movement, he mused (despite inevitable pushback from the Jeb Bushes of the world).

Francis chose to be named after Francis of Assisi — known as the patron saint of ecology and revered for his love for nature and animals.

We may deem it radical for the Pope to say, as he does in a leaked draft, that the earth "is protesting for the wrong that we are doing to her, because of the irresponsible use and abuse of the goods that God has placed on her" — but that only shows how leaders and followers alike have ignored teachings inherent in our faith.

"The separation between religion and science has been so strong," Grim noted.

And it's well past time that ended.

We — the world's six billion or so believers — are natural allies of the environmental movement. Time to take Francis' lead, and act like it.

THE MICROTREND: The trouble with spring break

Spring: the season for birds chirping, flowers blooming and ... teen pregnancy? A five-year study of 838 pregnant teens at an Ontario hospital found a "persistent" increase in conceptions every March. March break shenanigans are the obvious culprit, but one of the researchers says teenagers who couple up early in the school year are getting "serious" by spring. Adults, on the other hand, most often get pregnant in December — a testament to the power of eggnog and holiday cheer.

AZIZ ANSARI Aziz Ansari Modern Romance

'Stud mentality' among guys on Tinder horrifies the comedian

Lakshmi Gandhi Metro in New York

Fans who have closely followed former Parks and Recreation star Aziz Ansari's stand-up career have surely noticed that the comic has taken a serious turn in recent years. Gone are the cute stories about his cousins and the monologues on basic cable dramas.

Instead, the 32-year-old NYU grad has been focused on deeper questions: What is love? Is there such thing as a soulmate? And, most important of all, why hasn't he or she texted me back?

Co-written with sociology profes-sor Eric Klinenberg, Modern Romance explores all of those questions and more, in an extensively researched journey that took the pair around the world as they assessed different dating profiles and wacky online dating messages. (Note to all of the guys out there, first messages that simply say "Yo" or "Hey" aren't particularly well received.) We've rounded up the top three lessons we learned from Ansari's travels.

Too many choices really are overwhelming

Unlike a crowded bar, "online there are no lonely corners," the comedian writes. "Everywhere is filled with people looking to con-nect." Despite that, daters everywhere are constantly rejecting people.

The comedian memorably sits down with a twentysomething named Derek who, he notes, "isn't unattractive... but wouldn't necessarily turn heads at a party." Ansari then watches in horror as Derek swipes no on several attractive, interesting women who had messaged him online. "He didn't strike me as a stud," he adds, "but wow, when you watched him comb through those profiles, he had a stud mentality."

Remember the person on the other end is a person

Because so much of the modern search for romantic partners occurs on our phones, it's easy to forget you are talking to a person with feelings

Ansari is disturbed by how easy it is to completely dismiss someone—especially now as breaking up via text becomes increasingly more common.

The quality of your dates is more important than the quantity

Back when Ansari was single in New York a few years ago, he had something of a revelation when it came to his single status. He and his friends "were consistently choosing to meet as many people as possible instead of investing in a relationship.' Because this method obviously wasn't working for him, he decided to revise his approach to looking for love.

"What I found was that a first date that was a six was usually an eight on a second date," he writes. "I knew the person better and we kept building a good rapport together.'

The lesson here? Maybe next time give that nice guy or girl you met online a second chance. It could change the course of your love life.

OMG SHAKESPEARE

Book series re-tells the classics with Internet lingo

A set of books that convey the classic tales of Shakespeare via emoji-laden texts and social media updates has been drawing a strong response in recent days.

OMG Shakespeare from Random House Books for Young Readers includes two newly released titles — srsly Hamlet and YOLO Juliet plus two others due out in early January — Macbeth #killingit and A Midsummer Night #nofilter.

An excerpt from srsly Hamlet reads:

• Ophelia has updated her relationship status from 'In a relationship' to 'It's complicated.'

• Claudius has posted 11 new photos to the album: Here We Go a-Wassailing! — with Queen Gertrude and 10 others.

• Queen Gertrude likes this.

• Hamlet: 'It's almost midnight. LET'S DO THIS. #FOMO'

The stories, described as "the perfect gift for hip theatre lovers and teens," have been adapted by Courtney Carbone and Brett Wright, both children's book editors. And while the concept will no doubt appeal to some, feedback has been mitigated at best.

The Gawker Review of Books reacts, "To paraphrase the beloved poet and playwright: [inserts five smiling poop emoji]," while a much re-tweeted comment from popular Twitter user @FreddyAmazin reads, "Never wanted to burn a book before."

Judd Apatow reflects on life as a comedian in his new book

The comedy education of Judd Apatow began with unusual access to great comic minds, which he pried for straightforward instruction: How do you tell a joke? Growing up on Long Island as a comedy nerd before there was such a thing (or many others like him), Apatow managed to land interviews with the likes of Jerry Seinfeld, Jay Leno and Steve Allen; most of whom turned up expecting something other than a 15-year-old kid with a high school radio show.

It was a foundational beginning for what became a career that has done a lot to define comedy in the last 20 years — from The Larry Sanders Show to Freaks and Geeks, The Cable Guy and The 40 Year-Old Virgin.

In a new book, Sick in the Head: Conversations About Life and Comedy, out Tuesday, Apatow, 47, returns to those high-school interviews (he kept the tapes) to publish them, as well as add new, more recent talks with many others (Louis C.K., Jon Stewart, Chris Rock). Proceeds go to Dave Eggers' 826, which provides free tutoring and literacy programs to kids.

The conversations centre on comedy — where it comes from and how it work — but grow into more expansive and intimate reflections on life from some of the sharpest, most thoughtful minds around

"I'm interested just in how people are surviving and trying to remain relevant as the decades go on," says Apatow. "After success, what is the point of doing this?"

Smarter gardening cuts time-sucking routines

Too many plants, too little time? A lot of unnecessary effort can be weeded out with some time- and energy-saving shortcuts, from plant selection to better tools.

"I realized one day that I was becoming a slave to my plants," said Kerry Ann Mendez of Kennebunk, Maine, author of The Right-Size Flower Garden. "I was working harder for them than they were working for me."

Plants are not your children or pets, she said. "If they're not performing up to your standards — if they take too much time and effort — don't make any excuses for them. Tear them out. Take them away."

Here are ways to garden smarter:

- Use native plants. With natives, you don't need to water and there's no fertilizing, Mendez said. Little or no handholding is required, and they're important for bio needs, like attracting pollinators.
- attracting pollinators.

 Mulch. "People are doing more with mulch," Mendez said, "especially multi-purposing, nutrient-rich mulches that can energize plants while reducing water evaporation from the soil. Ground covers also help by discouraging weeds and providing a tapestry of foliage and flowers."

- Plant shrubs and ornamental trees. "Woody plants require much less maintenance than perennials," Mendez said.
- Downsize. "Eliminate some of that mowing and weeding," said Brooke Edmunds, an Oregon State University extension horticulturist. "Plant using lawn mixes that work even if they're not as frequently mowed. Use perennials more than annuals."

Canada to face Switzerland in knockout phase

Canada will meet Switzerland in the round of 16 at the Women's World Cup.

A tournament official confirmed the matchup Wednesday, the last day of pool play at the 24-country tournament.

As Group A winner, Canada meets the third-place finisher from Group C, D, or E on Sunday at B.C. Place Stadium.

That makes for 15 permutations but with the Netherlands, in Group A, and Switzerland, in Group C, guaranteed to be two of the four third-place finishers moving on, that reduces the number of permutations to six.

And in every one of those cases, Canada faces Switzerland. The Swiss (1-2-0) are ranked 19th in the world, compared to

No. 8 for Canada (1-0-2). The Canadian women have played Switzerland four times, with three victories and one draw. Their last meeting was a 2-0 win for Canada at the 2013 Cyprus Cup.

It's Switzerland's first trip to the World Cup. Coach Martina Voss-Teckleburg's team lost 1-0 to Japan and 2-1 to Cameroon but thumped Ecuador 10-1.

The Canada-Switzerland winner will meet England or Norway in the quarter-finals.

The Dutch (four points, zero goal differential) and Swiss (three points, plus-seven) are guaranteed of going through because their numbers are better than the third-place finishers in Group B (Thailand, three points, minusseven) and Group D (Sweden, three points, zero).

The top four third-place finishers from the six groups advance, along with the group winners and runners-up.

The 2015 tournament, expanded to 24 teams from 16, marks only the second time that Canada has advanced out of the group stage. THE CANADIAN PRESS

☀IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20 Information that could be worth a lot of money will come your way today. You may be tempted to pass on what you learn to your friends but if you are smart you will keep it to yourself. Knowledge is power — and profit too.

Taurus April 21 - May 21 In just a few days your view of the world will change for the better and your current negative attitude will fade away. Focus on the many good things in your life rather than the few things that have gone wrong.

I Gemini May 22 - June 21 Recent cosmic activity has tested you to the limit and because you've been on the go from morning to night you may now be exhausted. If so, take the next few days off. The universe can go on without you for a bit.

Cancer June 22 - July 23 Look back over the previous year and decide which of your ambitions to leave in the past and which you can take with you into the future. Dream, but be ruthlessly realistic as well.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23 Make the most of the good things that happen today and tomorrow because over the weekend the atmosphere will change and you may not be quite so happy. A time for thinking rather than doing is approaching.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23 What is most important in your life? The money you make? The status you enjoy? Those things may be important in the short-term but over the course of a lifetime it's the love you give that makes all the difference. What will you give today?

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23 The sun's stay in the adventurous area of your chart ends at the weekend, so make the next few days a time of discovery. Not that you won't be able to discover things after but you will have responsibilities to deal with.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22 You may not like what you have to do now but the sooner you get it done the sooner you can move on. The sun's entry into your fellow water sign of Cancer on Sunday marks a turning point in your fortunes.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21 Try not to take it personally if people do not agree with your point of view. If they get the impression you're thin-skinned they will focus on it. Be bold in your own beliefs and accepting of alternative points of view.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20 You have covered a lot of ground in recent weeks and you will cover a lot more in the months to come. For best results though you need to stop being such a loner and join with those who share your interests.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19 So many good things have happened of late that you may believe you'll be lucky forever. Know from past experience that is unlikely to be true. Life moves in cycles, so enjoy the highs but look out for the next low.

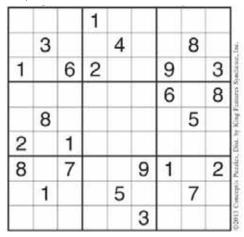

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20 Act decisively today. Make sure that what has been started finally gets finished. Problems of a purely personal nature have taken up too much of your time and energy in recent weeks, so resolve them and move on.
